Meet Jacqueline, our resident sex & love expert

Q C'mon, tell us... have you ever had sex in the great outdoors?

A "Have I ever! I love having sex outside. It's a fun way to add some spice to life and holiday memories. When I lived in Japan my boyfriend and I used to do it in temple grounds so that's probably the most unusual. I've also done it on secluded cliff tops around the world, in caves, in the occasional forest under looming trees. And my own backyard has had its entertainment, too!"

Q When do you feel sexiest?

A "Sexiness is a state of being, so it's hard for me not to feel sexy! It's an innate confidence in oneself, you feel good from the inside out, and emanate that through the way you carry yourself, the clothes you wear, your expression, a feeling of vitality, power and knowing how good it is to be a woman!"

Q What's your definition of love?

A "Ah, love: maternal love, romantic love, love of place, love of self, universal love. How to define such myriad sensations? True love, of any sort, adds depth and meaning to life. It's not based on neediness, lack or fear, which too many people misrepresent as love. It's a fullness which expands life."

GET ALL FIBRE-D UP NOW

A healthy diet includes about 30g of dietary fibre a day. Most Australians aren't getting enough. Here's the lowdown on why it's important and how you can get your daily fix.

> KEEPING YOU REGULAR

Fibre helps to maintain regularity. Insoluble fibre, such as that found in wheat bran, is known to promote digestive health by keeping you regular.

> VARIETY IS THE SPICE OF LIFE

Different types of fibre perform different roles in the body, so you need to ensure you're getting enough fibre from a range of foods to maintain good health. Fibre is found in plant foods such as cereals, grains, fruit, vegetables, nuts, seeds, beans and lentils.

> TAKE THE CHALLENGE

Eat a bowl of All-Bran® Honey Almond cereal every morning for seven days. With more than 20 per cent of the recommended daily intake for fibre, it's an easy, tasty way to help you get the fibre you need.
